DATELINE: athens, april 23; ITEM NO: 0423122

an international conference on "biopolitics and international cooperation" will be held in athens from may 6 to 10, the greek news agency ana reported today. scientists, environmentalists, scholars from more than 20 countries will take part in the conference sponsored and organized by the athens-based biopolitics international organization (bio). according to ana, the six-day meeting will focus on the urgent need to recognize the immediate impact of biological sciences on all aspects of life. bio's president, dr. agni blabianos-arvanitis, said at a press conference here wednesday that biopolitics aims at promoting international cooperation to increase respect for "bios", the greek word for human life, in general. she noted that biology has an important influence on many aspects of life, including economics, athletics, architecture, the arts and communications. "the social values, social structures and legislation should be developed to keep up with the fast pace of technology," dr. blabianos-arvanitis said.
