B.I.O. President becomes Goodwill Ambassador for the Hellenic Society for the Protection of Autistic People

*Event in Celebration of World Autism Awareness Day
Athens, April 4, 2014*

B.I.O. President and Founder, Prof. Agni Vlavianos Arvanitis, was proclaimed Goodwill Ambassador for the Hellenic Society for the Protection of Autistic People, during a conference in celebration of World Autism Awareness Day, held in Athens, on April 4, 2014.

The B.I.O. President expressed her unwavering support for the effort to advance the interests of autistic people and highlighted the importance of the involvement of all members of society towards this end. She stressed that every act of giving is in the interest of bios, the most precious possession on our planet. Humanity needs to understand that diversity is a source of richness, and as such, must be treasured. Autistic people represent this diversity, which is part of the mosaic of human society. Differentiation and interdependence are key elements for a healthy society. Like the human body, society is made up of different parts. The contribution of every differentiated part is crucial for the human body to function. In the same sense, the contribution of every member is essential for the building of a society of harmony and hope.

The State should become fully committed to offer ongoing support and services for people with autism, their families and carers. Caring for people with autism is synonymous with love, responsibility and interdependence, requiring international support, mobilization and commitment from every member of society. In this effort, we pledge our full and steadfast support.
