The 'Hellenic-Turkish Cooperation in Biopolitics on the road to European Union Ideals' symposium was held on February 9th in Athens under the auspices of the Ambassador of Turkey, Mr. Yigit Alpoğan. This follows the success of previous conferences and symposia in Istanbul (1992), Ankara (1997), Trabzon (1989,1993), Adana (1995) and Athens (1990), which focused on Hellenic-Turkish cooperation and strengthened the friendship between the two countries through an event that attempts to promote bio-diplomacy, education, and environmental governance as the needed vision for the future.

What is Biopolitics

Dr. Agni Vlavianos-Arvanitis explains her unique idea to save the planet and bring peace.

'It goes unnoticed that people behave divisively, run after money and suffer. We do not stop for a minute to think that in having life we have everything. The earth is a small spot in the universe. But the special thing about the earth is that it possesses life. This creates responsibility

The need for appreciation and protection of the bio-environment, and for a shift from an anthropocentric to a biocentric vision
