Let not the Olympic Games become a lost opportunity

July 19, 2012

We are living in complicated and dangerous times. A crisis in values, a crisis in ethics and, above all, a crisis in leadership are threatening the continuity of bios – life – on our planet. Let us not allow the Olympic Games to become a lost opportunity. We need to listen to the ticking clock of destruction; there is no time to waste.

To overcome these multiple crises we need ethical guidelines like the Hippocratic Oath in every profession. We also need to elicit the cooperation of culture and technology in the race to save the environment. The Olympics can involve the participation of representatives from every profession who have exhibited ethical and environmental excellence to expand their potential and deliver a message of hope for humanity. We cannot afford to miss the opportunity for a new vision. The pathway to peace is in the flame and light of the Olympiads.
